

Published in The Noise

<http://thenoise-boston.com/>

Issue 273 | July-Aug 2007

originally found at:

<http://www.thenoise-boston.com/content/blogcategory/3/17/>

now visible via the Wayback Machine at:

<http://web.archive.org/web/20070711190209/http://www.thenoise-boston.com/content/blogcategory/3/17/>

ELECTRIC LASER PEOPLE

Straight Talk on Raising Kids

13-song CD

These MIT graduates know how to do more than just build robots and design prosthetic limbs; they can also arrange and produce music to par with Warner Bros. Studying engineering and scientific theory not only results in lucrative careers but in this case it helped produce artistic conceptualizations.

Straight Talk on Raising Kids, recorded and produced by the band, is an extension of their brilliantly trained minds, now motivated to produce melody and rhyme. Electric Laser People is a party band to say the least. Their sound blends the hip hop stylings of The Beastie Boys with the production and song writing abilities of The Flaming Lips and The Police. They also have a sense of humor that stands out most with “The Makeout Song” and “Words Couldn’t Do Justice” (which is a short bootleg). The CD starts off and finishes strong with some minor snags in between. It contains a plethora of styles ranging from hip hop to bluegrass to country to blues. This is for fans of early Beck and Talking Heads.

(Leonid)